

Page 1

This is page 1 of 1000. In words, this is page one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 2

This is page 2 of 1000. In words, this is page two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 3

This is page 3 of 1000. In words, this is page three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 4

This is page 4 of 1000. In words, this is page four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 5

This is page 5 of 1000. In words, this is page five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 6

This is page 6 of 1000. In words, this is page six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 7

This is page 7 of 1000. In words, this is page seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 8

This is page 8 of 1000. In words, this is page eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 9

This is page 9 of 1000. In words, this is page nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 10

This is page 10 of 1000. In words, this is page ten. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 11

This is page 11 of 1000. In words, this is page eleven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 12

This is page 12 of 1000. In words, this is page twelve. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 13

This is page 13 of 1000. In words, this is page thirteen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 14

This is page 14 of 1000. In words, this is page fourteen. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 15

This is page 15 of 1000. In words, this is page fifteen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 16

This is page 16 of 1000. In words, this is page sixteen. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 17

This is page 17 of 1000. In words, this is page seventeen. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 18

This is page 18 of 1000. In words, this is page eighteen. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 19

This is page 19 of 1000. In words, this is page nineteen. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 20

This is page 20 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 21

This is page 21 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 22

This is page 22 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 23

This is page 23 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 24

This is page 24 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 25

This is page 25 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 26

This is page 26 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 27

This is page 27 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 28

This is page 28 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 29

This is page 29 of 1000. In words, this is page twenty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 30

This is page 30 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 31

This is page 31 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 32

This is page 32 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 33

This is page 33 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 34

This is page 34 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 35

This is page 35 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 36

This is page 36 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 37

This is page 37 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 38

This is page 38 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 39

This is page 39 of 1000. In words, this is page thirty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 40

This is page 40 of 1000. In words, this is page forty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 41

This is page 41 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 42

This is page 42 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 43

This is page 43 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 44

This is page 44 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 45

This is page 45 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 46

This is page 46 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 47

This is page 47 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 48

This is page 48 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 49

This is page 49 of 1000. In words, this is page forty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 50

This is page 50 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 51

This is page 51 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 52

This is page 52 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 53

This is page 53 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 54

This is page 54 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 55

This is page 55 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 56

This is page 56 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 57

This is page 57 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 58

This is page 58 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 59

This is page 59 of 1000. In words, this is page fifty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 60

This is page 60 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 61

This is page 61 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 62

This is page 62 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 63

This is page 63 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 64

This is page 64 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 65

This is page 65 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 66

This is page 66 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 67

This is page 67 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 68

This is page 68 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 69

This is page 69 of 1000. In words, this is page sixty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 70

This is page 70 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 71

This is page 71 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 72

This is page 72 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 73

This is page 73 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 74

This is page 74 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 75

This is page 75 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 76

This is page 76 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 77

This is page 77 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 78

This is page 78 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 79

This is page 79 of 1000. In words, this is page seventy-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 80

This is page 80 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 81

This is page 81 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 82

This is page 82 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 83

This is page 83 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 84

This is page 84 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 85

This is page 85 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 86

This is page 86 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 87

This is page 87 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 88

This is page 88 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 89

This is page 89 of 1000. In words, this is page eighty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 90

This is page 90 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 91

This is page 91 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 92

This is page 92 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 93

This is page 93 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 94

This is page 94 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 95

This is page 95 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 96

This is page 96 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 97

This is page 97 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 98

This is page 98 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 99

This is page 99 of 1000. In words, this is page ninety-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 100

This is page 100 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 101

This is page 101 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 102

This is page 102 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 103

This is page 103 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 104

This is page 104 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 105

This is page 105 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 106

This is page 106 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 107

This is page 107 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 108

This is page 108 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 109

This is page 109 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 110

This is page 110 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ten. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 111

This is page 111 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eleven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 112

This is page 112 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twelve. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 113

This is page 113 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirteen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 114

This is page 114 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fourteen. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 115

This is page 115 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifteen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 116

This is page 116 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixteen. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 117

This is page 117 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventeen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 118

This is page 118 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighteen. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 119

This is page 119 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred nineteen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 120

This is page 120 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 121

This is page 121 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 122

This is page 122 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 123

This is page 123 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 124

This is page 124 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 125

This is page 125 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 126

This is page 126 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 127

This is page 127 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 128

This is page 128 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 129

This is page 129 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 130

This is page 130 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 131

This is page 131 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 132

This is page 132 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 133

This is page 133 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 134

This is page 134 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 135

This is page 135 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 136

This is page 136 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 137

This is page 137 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 138

This is page 138 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 139

This is page 139 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 140

This is page 140 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 141

This is page 141 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 142

This is page 142 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 143

This is page 143 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 144

This is page 144 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 145

This is page 145 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 146

This is page 146 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 147

This is page 147 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 148

This is page 148 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 149

This is page 149 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred forty-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 150

This is page 150 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 151

This is page 151 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 152

This is page 152 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 153

This is page 153 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 154

This is page 154 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 155

This is page 155 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 156

This is page 156 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 157

This is page 157 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 158

This is page 158 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 159

This is page 159 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 160

This is page 160 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 161

This is page 161 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 162

This is page 162 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 163

This is page 163 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 164

This is page 164 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 165

This is page 165 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 166

This is page 166 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 167

This is page 167 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 168

This is page 168 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 169

This is page 169 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 170

This is page 170 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 171

This is page 171 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 172

This is page 172 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 173

This is page 173 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 174

This is page 174 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 175

This is page 175 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 176

This is page 176 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 177

This is page 177 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 178

This is page 178 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 179

This is page 179 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 180

This is page 180 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 181

This is page 181 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 182

This is page 182 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 183

This is page 183 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 184

This is page 184 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 185

This is page 185 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 186

This is page 186 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 187

This is page 187 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 188

This is page 188 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 189

This is page 189 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 190

This is page 190 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 191

This is page 191 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 192

This is page 192 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 193

This is page 193 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 194

This is page 194 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 195

This is page 195 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 196

This is page 196 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 197

This is page 197 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 198

This is page 198 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 199

This is page 199 of 1000. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 200

This is page 200 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 201

This is page 201 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 202

This is page 202 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 203

This is page 203 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 204

This is page 204 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 205

This is page 205 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 206

This is page 206 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 207

This is page 207 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 208

This is page 208 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 209

This is page 209 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 210

This is page 210 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ten. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 211

This is page 211 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eleven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 212

This is page 212 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twelve. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 213

This is page 213 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirteen. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 214

This is page 214 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fourteen. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 215

This is page 215 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifteen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 216

This is page 216 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixteen. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 217

This is page 217 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventeen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 218

This is page 218 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighteen. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 219

This is page 219 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred nineteen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 220

This is page 220 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 221

This is page 221 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 222

This is page 222 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 223

This is page 223 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 224

This is page 224 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 225

This is page 225 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 226

This is page 226 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 227

This is page 227 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 228

This is page 228 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 229

This is page 229 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 230

This is page 230 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 231

This is page 231 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 232

This is page 232 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 233

This is page 233 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 234

This is page 234 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 235

This is page 235 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 236

This is page 236 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 237

This is page 237 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 238

This is page 238 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 239

This is page 239 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 240

This is page 240 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 241

This is page 241 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 242

This is page 242 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 243

This is page 243 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 244

This is page 244 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 245

This is page 245 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 246

This is page 246 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 247

This is page 247 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 248

This is page 248 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 249

This is page 249 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred forty-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 250

This is page 250 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 251

This is page 251 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 252

This is page 252 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 253

This is page 253 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 254

This is page 254 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 255

This is page 255 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 256

This is page 256 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 257

This is page 257 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 258

This is page 258 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 259

This is page 259 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 260

This is page 260 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 261

This is page 261 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 262

This is page 262 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 263

This is page 263 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 264

This is page 264 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 265

This is page 265 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 266

This is page 266 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 267

This is page 267 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 268

This is page 268 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 269

This is page 269 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 270

This is page 270 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 271

This is page 271 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 272

This is page 272 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 273

This is page 273 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 274

This is page 274 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 275

This is page 275 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 276

This is page 276 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 277

This is page 277 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 278

This is page 278 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 279

This is page 279 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 280

This is page 280 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 281

This is page 281 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 282

This is page 282 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 283

This is page 283 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 284

This is page 284 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 285

This is page 285 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 286

This is page 286 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 287

This is page 287 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 288

This is page 288 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 289

This is page 289 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 290

This is page 290 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 291

This is page 291 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 292

This is page 292 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 293

This is page 293 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 294

This is page 294 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 295

This is page 295 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 296

This is page 296 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 297

This is page 297 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 298

This is page 298 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 299

This is page 299 of 1000. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 300

This is page 300 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 301

This is page 301 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 302

This is page 302 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 303

This is page 303 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 304

This is page 304 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 305

This is page 305 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 306

This is page 306 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 307

This is page 307 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 308

This is page 308 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 309

This is page 309 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 310

This is page 310 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ten. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 311

This is page 311 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eleven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 312

This is page 312 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twelve. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 313

This is page 313 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirteen. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 314

This is page 314 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fourteen. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 315

This is page 315 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifteen. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 316

This is page 316 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixteen. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 317

This is page 317 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventeen. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 318

This is page 318 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighteen. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 319

This is page 319 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred nineteen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 320

This is page 320 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 321

This is page 321 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 322

This is page 322 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 323

This is page 323 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 324

This is page 324 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 325

This is page 325 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 326

This is page 326 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 327

This is page 327 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 328

This is page 328 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 329

This is page 329 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 330

This is page 330 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 331

This is page 331 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 332

This is page 332 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 333

This is page 333 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 334

This is page 334 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 335

This is page 335 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 336

This is page 336 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 337

This is page 337 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 338

This is page 338 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 339

This is page 339 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 340

This is page 340 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 341

This is page 341 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 342

This is page 342 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 343

This is page 343 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 344

This is page 344 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 345

This is page 345 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 346

This is page 346 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 347

This is page 347 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 348

This is page 348 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 349

This is page 349 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred forty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 350

This is page 350 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 351

This is page 351 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 352

This is page 352 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 353

This is page 353 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 354

This is page 354 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 355

This is page 355 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 356

This is page 356 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 357

This is page 357 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 358

This is page 358 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 359

This is page 359 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 360

This is page 360 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 361

This is page 361 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 362

This is page 362 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 363

This is page 363 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 364

This is page 364 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 365

This is page 365 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 366

This is page 366 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 367

This is page 367 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 368

This is page 368 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 369

This is page 369 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 370

This is page 370 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 371

This is page 371 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 372

This is page 372 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 373

This is page 373 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 374

This is page 374 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 375

This is page 375 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 376

This is page 376 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 377

This is page 377 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 378

This is page 378 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 379

This is page 379 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 380

This is page 380 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 381

This is page 381 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 382

This is page 382 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 383

This is page 383 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 384

This is page 384 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 385

This is page 385 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 386

This is page 386 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 387

This is page 387 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 388

This is page 388 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 389

This is page 389 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 390

This is page 390 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 391

This is page 391 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 392

This is page 392 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 393

This is page 393 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 394

This is page 394 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 395

This is page 395 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 396

This is page 396 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 397

This is page 397 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 398

This is page 398 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 399

This is page 399 of 1000. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 400

This is page 400 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 401

This is page 401 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 402

This is page 402 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 403

This is page 403 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 404

This is page 404 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 405

This is page 405 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 406

This is page 406 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 407

This is page 407 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 408

This is page 408 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 409

This is page 409 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 410

This is page 410 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ten. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 411

This is page 411 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eleven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 412

This is page 412 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twelve. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 413

This is page 413 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirteen. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 414

This is page 414 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fourteen. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 415

This is page 415 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifteen. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 416

This is page 416 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixteen. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 417

This is page 417 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventeen. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 418

This is page 418 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighteen. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 419

This is page 419 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred nineteen. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 420

This is page 420 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 421

This is page 421 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 422

This is page 422 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 423

This is page 423 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 424

This is page 424 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 425

This is page 425 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 426

This is page 426 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 427

This is page 427 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 428

This is page 428 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 429

This is page 429 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 430

This is page 430 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 431

This is page 431 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 432

This is page 432 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 433

This is page 433 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 434

This is page 434 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 435

This is page 435 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 436

This is page 436 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 437

This is page 437 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 438

This is page 438 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 439

This is page 439 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 440

This is page 440 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 441

This is page 441 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 442

This is page 442 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 443

This is page 443 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 444

This is page 444 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 445

This is page 445 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 446

This is page 446 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 447

This is page 447 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 448

This is page 448 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 449

This is page 449 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred forty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 450

This is page 450 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 451

This is page 451 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 452

This is page 452 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 453

This is page 453 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 454

This is page 454 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 455

This is page 455 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 456

This is page 456 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 457

This is page 457 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 458

This is page 458 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 459

This is page 459 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 460

This is page 460 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 461

This is page 461 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 462

This is page 462 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 463

This is page 463 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 464

This is page 464 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 465

This is page 465 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 466

This is page 466 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 467

This is page 467 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 468

This is page 468 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 469

This is page 469 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 470

This is page 470 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 471

This is page 471 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 472

This is page 472 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 473

This is page 473 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 474

This is page 474 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 475

This is page 475 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 476

This is page 476 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 477

This is page 477 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 478

This is page 478 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 479

This is page 479 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 480

This is page 480 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 481

This is page 481 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 482

This is page 482 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 483

This is page 483 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 484

This is page 484 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 485

This is page 485 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 486

This is page 486 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 487

This is page 487 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 488

This is page 488 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 489

This is page 489 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 490

This is page 490 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 491

This is page 491 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 492

This is page 492 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 493

This is page 493 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 494

This is page 494 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 495

This is page 495 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 496

This is page 496 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 497

This is page 497 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 498

This is page 498 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 499

This is page 499 of 1000. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 500

This is page 500 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 501

This is page 501 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 502

This is page 502 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 503

This is page 503 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 504

This is page 504 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 505

This is page 505 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 506

This is page 506 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 507

This is page 507 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 508

This is page 508 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 509

This is page 509 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 510

This is page 510 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ten. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 511

This is page 511 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eleven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 512

This is page 512 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twelve. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 513

This is page 513 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirteen. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 514

This is page 514 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fourteen. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 515

This is page 515 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifteen. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 516

This is page 516 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixteen. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 517

This is page 517 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventeen. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 518

This is page 518 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighteen. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 519

This is page 519 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred nineteen. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 520

This is page 520 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 521

This is page 521 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 522

This is page 522 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 523

This is page 523 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 524

This is page 524 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 525

This is page 525 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 526

This is page 526 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 527

This is page 527 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 528

This is page 528 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 529

This is page 529 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred twenty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 530

This is page 530 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 531

This is page 531 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 532

This is page 532 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 533

This is page 533 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 534

This is page 534 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 535

This is page 535 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 536

This is page 536 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 537

This is page 537 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 538

This is page 538 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 539

This is page 539 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred thirty-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 540

This is page 540 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 541

This is page 541 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 542

This is page 542 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 543

This is page 543 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 544

This is page 544 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 545

This is page 545 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 546

This is page 546 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 547

This is page 547 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 548

This is page 548 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 549

This is page 549 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred forty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 550

This is page 550 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 551

This is page 551 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 552

This is page 552 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 553

This is page 553 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 554

This is page 554 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 555

This is page 555 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 556

This is page 556 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 557

This is page 557 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 558

This is page 558 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 559

This is page 559 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred fifty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 560

This is page 560 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 561

This is page 561 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 562

This is page 562 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 563

This is page 563 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 564

This is page 564 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 565

This is page 565 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 566

This is page 566 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 567

This is page 567 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 568

This is page 568 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 569

This is page 569 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred sixty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 570

This is page 570 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 571

This is page 571 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 572

This is page 572 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 573

This is page 573 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 574

This is page 574 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 575

This is page 575 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 576

This is page 576 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 577

This is page 577 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 578

This is page 578 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 579

This is page 579 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred seventy-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 580

This is page 580 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 581

This is page 581 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 582

This is page 582 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 583

This is page 583 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 584

This is page 584 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 585

This is page 585 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 586

This is page 586 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 587

This is page 587 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 588

This is page 588 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 589

This is page 589 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred eighty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 590

This is page 590 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 591

This is page 591 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 592

This is page 592 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 593

This is page 593 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 594

This is page 594 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 595

This is page 595 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 596

This is page 596 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 597

This is page 597 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 598

This is page 598 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 599

This is page 599 of 1000. In words, this is page five hundred ninety-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 600

This is page 600 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 601

This is page 601 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 602

This is page 602 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 603

This is page 603 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 604

This is page 604 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 605

This is page 605 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 606

This is page 606 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 607

This is page 607 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 608

This is page 608 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 609

This is page 609 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 610

This is page 610 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ten. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 611

This is page 611 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eleven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 612

This is page 612 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twelve. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 613

This is page 613 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirteen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 614

This is page 614 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fourteen. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 615

This is page 615 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifteen. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 616

This is page 616 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixteen. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 617

This is page 617 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventeen. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 618

This is page 618 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighteen. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 619

This is page 619 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred nineteen. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 620

This is page 620 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 621

This is page 621 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 622

This is page 622 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 623

This is page 623 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 624

This is page 624 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 625

This is page 625 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 626

This is page 626 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 627

This is page 627 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 628

This is page 628 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 629

This is page 629 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred twenty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 630

This is page 630 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 631

This is page 631 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 632

This is page 632 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 633

This is page 633 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 634

This is page 634 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 635

This is page 635 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 636

This is page 636 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 637

This is page 637 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 638

This is page 638 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 639

This is page 639 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred thirty-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 640

This is page 640 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 641

This is page 641 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 642

This is page 642 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 643

This is page 643 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 644

This is page 644 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 645

This is page 645 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 646

This is page 646 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 647

This is page 647 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 648

This is page 648 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 649

This is page 649 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred forty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 650

This is page 650 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 651

This is page 651 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 652

This is page 652 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 653

This is page 653 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 654

This is page 654 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 655

This is page 655 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 656

This is page 656 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 657

This is page 657 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 658

This is page 658 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 659

This is page 659 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred fifty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 660

This is page 660 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 661

This is page 661 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 662

This is page 662 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 663

This is page 663 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 664

This is page 664 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 665

This is page 665 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 666

This is page 666 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 667

This is page 667 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 668

This is page 668 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 669

This is page 669 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred sixty-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 670

This is page 670 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 671

This is page 671 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 672

This is page 672 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 673

This is page 673 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 674

This is page 674 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 675

This is page 675 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 676

This is page 676 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 677

This is page 677 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 678

This is page 678 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 679

This is page 679 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred seventy-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 680

This is page 680 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 681

This is page 681 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 682

This is page 682 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 683

This is page 683 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 684

This is page 684 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 685

This is page 685 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 686

This is page 686 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 687

This is page 687 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 688

This is page 688 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 689

This is page 689 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred eighty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 690

This is page 690 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 691

This is page 691 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 692

This is page 692 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 693

This is page 693 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 694

This is page 694 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 695

This is page 695 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 696

This is page 696 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 697

This is page 697 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 698

This is page 698 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 699

This is page 699 of 1000. In words, this is page six hundred ninety-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 700

This is page 700 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 701

This is page 701 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 702

This is page 702 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 703

This is page 703 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 704

This is page 704 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 705

This is page 705 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 706

This is page 706 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 707

This is page 707 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 708

This is page 708 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 709

This is page 709 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 710

This is page 710 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ten. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 711

This is page 711 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eleven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 712

This is page 712 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twelve. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 713

This is page 713 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirteen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 714

This is page 714 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fourteen. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 715

This is page 715 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifteen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 716

This is page 716 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixteen. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 717

This is page 717 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventeen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 718

This is page 718 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighteen. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 719

This is page 719 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred nineteen. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 720

This is page 720 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 721

This is page 721 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 722

This is page 722 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 723

This is page 723 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 724

This is page 724 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 725

This is page 725 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 726

This is page 726 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 727

This is page 727 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 728

This is page 728 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 729

This is page 729 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred twenty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 730

This is page 730 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 731

This is page 731 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 732

This is page 732 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 733

This is page 733 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 734

This is page 734 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 735

This is page 735 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 736

This is page 736 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 737

This is page 737 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 738

This is page 738 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 739

This is page 739 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred thirty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 740

This is page 740 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 741

This is page 741 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 742

This is page 742 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 743

This is page 743 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 744

This is page 744 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 745

This is page 745 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 746

This is page 746 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 747

This is page 747 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 748

This is page 748 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 749

This is page 749 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred forty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 750

This is page 750 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 751

This is page 751 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 752

This is page 752 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 753

This is page 753 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 754

This is page 754 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 755

This is page 755 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 756

This is page 756 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 757

This is page 757 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 758

This is page 758 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 759

This is page 759 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred fifty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 760

This is page 760 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 761

This is page 761 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 762

This is page 762 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 763

This is page 763 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 764

This is page 764 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 765

This is page 765 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 766

This is page 766 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 767

This is page 767 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 768

This is page 768 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 769

This is page 769 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred sixty-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 770

This is page 770 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 771

This is page 771 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 772

This is page 772 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 773

This is page 773 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 774

This is page 774 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 775

This is page 775 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 776

This is page 776 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 777

This is page 777 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 778

This is page 778 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 779

This is page 779 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred seventy-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 780

This is page 780 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 781

This is page 781 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 782

This is page 782 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 783

This is page 783 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 784

This is page 784 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 785

This is page 785 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 786

This is page 786 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 787

This is page 787 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 788

This is page 788 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 789

This is page 789 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred eighty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 790

This is page 790 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 791

This is page 791 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 792

This is page 792 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 793

This is page 793 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 794

This is page 794 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 795

This is page 795 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 796

This is page 796 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 797

This is page 797 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 798

This is page 798 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 799

This is page 799 of 1000. In words, this is page seven hundred ninety-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 800

This is page 800 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 801

This is page 801 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 802

This is page 802 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 803

This is page 803 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 804

This is page 804 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 805

This is page 805 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 806

This is page 806 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 807

This is page 807 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 808

This is page 808 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 809

This is page 809 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 810

This is page 810 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ten. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 811

This is page 811 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eleven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 812

This is page 812 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twelve. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 813

This is page 813 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirteen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 814

This is page 814 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fourteen. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 815

This is page 815 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifteen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 816

This is page 816 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixteen. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 817

This is page 817 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventeen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 818

This is page 818 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighteen. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 819

This is page 819 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred nineteen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 820

This is page 820 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 821

This is page 821 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 822

This is page 822 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 823

This is page 823 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 824

This is page 824 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 825

This is page 825 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 826

This is page 826 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 827

This is page 827 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 828

This is page 828 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 829

This is page 829 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred twenty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 830

This is page 830 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 831

This is page 831 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 832

This is page 832 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 833

This is page 833 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 834

This is page 834 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 835

This is page 835 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 836

This is page 836 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 837

This is page 837 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 838

This is page 838 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 839

This is page 839 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred thirty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 840

This is page 840 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 841

This is page 841 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 842

This is page 842 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 843

This is page 843 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 844

This is page 844 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 845

This is page 845 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 846

This is page 846 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 847

This is page 847 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 848

This is page 848 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 849

This is page 849 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred forty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 850

This is page 850 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 851

This is page 851 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 852

This is page 852 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 853

This is page 853 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 854

This is page 854 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 855

This is page 855 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 856

This is page 856 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 857

This is page 857 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 858

This is page 858 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 859

This is page 859 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred fifty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 860

This is page 860 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 861

This is page 861 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 862

This is page 862 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 863

This is page 863 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 864

This is page 864 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 865

This is page 865 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 866

This is page 866 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 867

This is page 867 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 868

This is page 868 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 869

This is page 869 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred sixty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 870

This is page 870 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 871

This is page 871 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 872

This is page 872 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 873

This is page 873 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 874

This is page 874 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 875

This is page 875 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 876

This is page 876 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 877

This is page 877 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 878

This is page 878 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 879

This is page 879 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred seventy-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 880

This is page 880 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 881

This is page 881 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 882

This is page 882 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 883

This is page 883 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 884

This is page 884 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 885

This is page 885 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 886

This is page 886 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 887

This is page 887 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 888

This is page 888 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 889

This is page 889 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred eighty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 890

This is page 890 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 891

This is page 891 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 892

This is page 892 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 893

This is page 893 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 894

This is page 894 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 895

This is page 895 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 896

This is page 896 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 897

This is page 897 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 898

This is page 898 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 899

This is page 899 of 1000. In words, this is page eight hundred ninety-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 900

This is page 900 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 901

This is page 901 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 902

This is page 902 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 903

This is page 903 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 904

This is page 904 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 905

This is page 905 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 906

This is page 906 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 907

This is page 907 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 908

This is page 908 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 909

This is page 909 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 910

This is page 910 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ten. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 911

This is page 911 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eleven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 912

This is page 912 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twelve. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 913

This is page 913 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirteen. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 914

This is page 914 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fourteen. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 915

This is page 915 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifteen. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 916

This is page 916 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixteen. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 917

This is page 917 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventeen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 918

This is page 918 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighteen. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 919

This is page 919 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred nineteen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 920

This is page 920 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 921

This is page 921 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 922

This is page 922 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 923

This is page 923 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 924

This is page 924 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 925

This is page 925 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 926

This is page 926 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 927

This is page 927 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 928

This is page 928 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 929

This is page 929 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred twenty-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 930

This is page 930 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 931

This is page 931 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 932

This is page 932 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 933

This is page 933 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 934

This is page 934 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 935

This is page 935 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 936

This is page 936 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 937

This is page 937 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 938

This is page 938 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 939

This is page 939 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred thirty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 940

This is page 940 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 941

This is page 941 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 942

This is page 942 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 943

This is page 943 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 944

This is page 944 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 945

This is page 945 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 946

This is page 946 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 947

This is page 947 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 948

This is page 948 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 949

This is page 949 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred forty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 950

This is page 950 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 951

This is page 951 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 952

This is page 952 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 953

This is page 953 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 954

This is page 954 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 955

This is page 955 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 956

This is page 956 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 957

This is page 957 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 958

This is page 958 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 959

This is page 959 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred fifty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 960

This is page 960 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 961

This is page 961 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 962

This is page 962 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 963

This is page 963 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 964

This is page 964 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 965

This is page 965 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 966

This is page 966 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 967

This is page 967 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 968

This is page 968 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 969

This is page 969 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred sixty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 970

This is page 970 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 971

This is page 971 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 972

This is page 972 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 973

This is page 973 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 974

This is page 974 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 975

This is page 975 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 976

This is page 976 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 977

This is page 977 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 978

This is page 978 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 979

This is page 979 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred seventy-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 980

This is page 980 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 981

This is page 981 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 982

This is page 982 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 983

This is page 983 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 984

This is page 984 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 985

This is page 985 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 986

This is page 986 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 987

This is page 987 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 988

This is page 988 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 989

This is page 989 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred eighty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 990

This is page 990 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 991

This is page 991 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 992

This is page 992 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 993

This is page 993 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 994

This is page 994 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 995

This is page 995 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 996

This is page 996 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 997

This is page 997 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 998

This is page 998 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 999

This is page 999 of 1000. In words, this is page nine hundred ninety-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 1000

This is page 1000 of 1000. In words, this is page one thousand. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.