

Page 1

This is page 1 of 500. In words, this is page one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 2

This is page 2 of 500. In words, this is page two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 3

This is page 3 of 500. In words, this is page three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 4

This is page 4 of 500. In words, this is page four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 5

This is page 5 of 500. In words, this is page five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 6

This is page 6 of 500. In words, this is page six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 7

This is page 7 of 500. In words, this is page seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 8

This is page 8 of 500. In words, this is page eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 9

This is page 9 of 500. In words, this is page nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 10

This is page 10 of 500. In words, this is page ten. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 11

This is page 11 of 500. In words, this is page eleven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 12

This is page 12 of 500. In words, this is page twelve. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 13

This is page 13 of 500. In words, this is page thirteen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 14

This is page 14 of 500. In words, this is page fourteen. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 15

This is page 15 of 500. In words, this is page fifteen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 16

This is page 16 of 500. In words, this is page sixteen. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 17

This is page 17 of 500. In words, this is page seventeen. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 18

This is page 18 of 500. In words, this is page eighteen. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 19

This is page 19 of 500. In words, this is page nineteen. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 20

This is page 20 of 500. In words, this is page twenty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 21

This is page 21 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 22

This is page 22 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 23

This is page 23 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 24

This is page 24 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 25

This is page 25 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 26

This is page 26 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 27

This is page 27 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 28

This is page 28 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 29

This is page 29 of 500. In words, this is page twenty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 30

This is page 30 of 500. In words, this is page thirty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 31

This is page 31 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 32

This is page 32 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 33

This is page 33 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 34

This is page 34 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 35

This is page 35 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 36

This is page 36 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 37

This is page 37 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 38

This is page 38 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 39

This is page 39 of 500. In words, this is page thirty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 40

This is page 40 of 500. In words, this is page forty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 41

This is page 41 of 500. In words, this is page forty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 42

This is page 42 of 500. In words, this is page forty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 43

This is page 43 of 500. In words, this is page forty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 44

This is page 44 of 500. In words, this is page forty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 45

This is page 45 of 500. In words, this is page forty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 46

This is page 46 of 500. In words, this is page forty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 47

This is page 47 of 500. In words, this is page forty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 48

This is page 48 of 500. In words, this is page forty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 49

This is page 49 of 500. In words, this is page forty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 50

This is page 50 of 500. In words, this is page fifty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 51

This is page 51 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 52

This is page 52 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 53

This is page 53 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 54

This is page 54 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 55

This is page 55 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 56

This is page 56 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 57

This is page 57 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 58

This is page 58 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 59

This is page 59 of 500. In words, this is page fifty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 60

This is page 60 of 500. In words, this is page sixty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 61

This is page 61 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 62

This is page 62 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 63

This is page 63 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 64

This is page 64 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 65

This is page 65 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 66

This is page 66 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 67

This is page 67 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 68

This is page 68 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 69

This is page 69 of 500. In words, this is page sixty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 70

This is page 70 of 500. In words, this is page seventy. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 71

This is page 71 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 72

This is page 72 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 73

This is page 73 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 74

This is page 74 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 75

This is page 75 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 76

This is page 76 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 77

This is page 77 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 78

This is page 78 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 79

This is page 79 of 500. In words, this is page seventy-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 80

This is page 80 of 500. In words, this is page eighty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 81

This is page 81 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 82

This is page 82 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 83

This is page 83 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 84

This is page 84 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 85

This is page 85 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 86

This is page 86 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 87

This is page 87 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 88

This is page 88 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 89

This is page 89 of 500. In words, this is page eighty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 90

This is page 90 of 500. In words, this is page ninety. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 91

This is page 91 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 92

This is page 92 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 93

This is page 93 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 94

This is page 94 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 95

This is page 95 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 96

This is page 96 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 97

This is page 97 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 98

This is page 98 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 99

This is page 99 of 500. In words, this is page ninety-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 100

This is page 100 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 101

This is page 101 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 102

This is page 102 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 103

This is page 103 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 104

This is page 104 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 105

This is page 105 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 106

This is page 106 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 107

This is page 107 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 108

This is page 108 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 109

This is page 109 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 110

This is page 110 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ten. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 111

This is page 111 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eleven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 112

This is page 112 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twelve. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 113

This is page 113 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirteen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 114

This is page 114 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fourteen. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 115

This is page 115 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifteen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 116

This is page 116 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixteen. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 117

This is page 117 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventeen. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 118

This is page 118 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighteen. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 119

This is page 119 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred nineteen. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 120

This is page 120 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 121

This is page 121 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 122

This is page 122 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 123

This is page 123 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 124

This is page 124 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 125

This is page 125 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 126

This is page 126 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 127

This is page 127 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 128

This is page 128 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 129

This is page 129 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred twenty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 130

This is page 130 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 131

This is page 131 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 132

This is page 132 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 133

This is page 133 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 134

This is page 134 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 135

This is page 135 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 136

This is page 136 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 137

This is page 137 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 138

This is page 138 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 139

This is page 139 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred thirty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 140

This is page 140 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 141

This is page 141 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 142

This is page 142 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 143

This is page 143 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 144

This is page 144 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 145

This is page 145 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 146

This is page 146 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 147

This is page 147 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 148

This is page 148 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 149

This is page 149 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred forty-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 150

This is page 150 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 151

This is page 151 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 152

This is page 152 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 153

This is page 153 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 154

This is page 154 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 155

This is page 155 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 156

This is page 156 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 157

This is page 157 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 158

This is page 158 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 159

This is page 159 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred fifty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 160

This is page 160 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 161

This is page 161 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 162

This is page 162 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 163

This is page 163 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 164

This is page 164 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 165

This is page 165 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 166

This is page 166 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 167

This is page 167 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 168

This is page 168 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 169

This is page 169 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred sixty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 170

This is page 170 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 171

This is page 171 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 172

This is page 172 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 173

This is page 173 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 174

This is page 174 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 175

This is page 175 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 176

This is page 176 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 177

This is page 177 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 178

This is page 178 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 179

This is page 179 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred seventy-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 180

This is page 180 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 181

This is page 181 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 182

This is page 182 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 183

This is page 183 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 184

This is page 184 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 185

This is page 185 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 186

This is page 186 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 187

This is page 187 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 188

This is page 188 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 189

This is page 189 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred eighty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 190

This is page 190 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 191

This is page 191 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 192

This is page 192 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 193

This is page 193 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 194

This is page 194 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 195

This is page 195 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 196

This is page 196 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 197

This is page 197 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 198

This is page 198 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 199

This is page 199 of 500. In words, this is page one hundred ninety-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 200

This is page 200 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 201

This is page 201 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 202

This is page 202 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 203

This is page 203 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 204

This is page 204 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 205

This is page 205 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 206

This is page 206 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 207

This is page 207 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 208

This is page 208 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 209

This is page 209 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 210

This is page 210 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ten. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 211

This is page 211 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eleven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 212

This is page 212 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twelve. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 213

This is page 213 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirteen. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 214

This is page 214 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fourteen. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 215

This is page 215 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifteen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 216

This is page 216 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixteen. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 217

This is page 217 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventeen. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 218

This is page 218 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighteen. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 219

This is page 219 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred nineteen. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 220

This is page 220 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 221

This is page 221 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 222

This is page 222 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 223

This is page 223 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 224

This is page 224 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 225

This is page 225 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 226

This is page 226 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 227

This is page 227 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 228

This is page 228 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 229

This is page 229 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred twenty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 230

This is page 230 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 231

This is page 231 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 232

This is page 232 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 233

This is page 233 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 234

This is page 234 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 235

This is page 235 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 236

This is page 236 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 237

This is page 237 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 238

This is page 238 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 239

This is page 239 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred thirty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 240

This is page 240 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 241

This is page 241 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 242

This is page 242 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 243

This is page 243 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 244

This is page 244 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 245

This is page 245 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 246

This is page 246 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 247

This is page 247 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 248

This is page 248 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 249

This is page 249 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred forty-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 250

This is page 250 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 251

This is page 251 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 252

This is page 252 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 253

This is page 253 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 254

This is page 254 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 255

This is page 255 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 256

This is page 256 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 257

This is page 257 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 258

This is page 258 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 259

This is page 259 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred fifty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 260

This is page 260 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 261

This is page 261 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 262

This is page 262 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 263

This is page 263 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 264

This is page 264 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 265

This is page 265 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 266

This is page 266 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 267

This is page 267 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 268

This is page 268 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 269

This is page 269 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred sixty-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 270

This is page 270 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 271

This is page 271 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 272

This is page 272 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 273

This is page 273 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 274

This is page 274 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 275

This is page 275 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 276

This is page 276 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 277

This is page 277 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 278

This is page 278 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 279

This is page 279 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred seventy-nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 280

This is page 280 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 281

This is page 281 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-one. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 282

This is page 282 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-two. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 283

This is page 283 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-three. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 284

This is page 284 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-four. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 285

This is page 285 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-five. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 286

This is page 286 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-six. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 287

This is page 287 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-seven. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 288

This is page 288 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-eight. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 289

This is page 289 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred eighty-nine. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 290

This is page 290 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 291

This is page 291 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 292

This is page 292 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 293

This is page 293 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 294

This is page 294 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 295

This is page 295 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 296

This is page 296 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 297

This is page 297 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 298

This is page 298 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 299

This is page 299 of 500. In words, this is page two hundred ninety-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 300

This is page 300 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 301

This is page 301 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 302

This is page 302 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 303

This is page 303 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 304

This is page 304 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 305

This is page 305 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 306

This is page 306 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 307

This is page 307 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 308

This is page 308 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 309

This is page 309 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 310

This is page 310 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ten. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 311

This is page 311 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eleven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 312

This is page 312 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twelve. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 313

This is page 313 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirteen. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 314

This is page 314 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fourteen. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 315

This is page 315 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifteen. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 316

This is page 316 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixteen. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 317

This is page 317 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventeen. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 318

This is page 318 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighteen. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 319

This is page 319 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred nineteen. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 320

This is page 320 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 321

This is page 321 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 322

This is page 322 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 323

This is page 323 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 324

This is page 324 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 325

This is page 325 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 326

This is page 326 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 327

This is page 327 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 328

This is page 328 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 329

This is page 329 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred twenty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 330

This is page 330 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 331

This is page 331 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 332

This is page 332 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 333

This is page 333 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 334

This is page 334 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 335

This is page 335 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 336

This is page 336 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 337

This is page 337 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 338

This is page 338 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 339

This is page 339 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred thirty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 340

This is page 340 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 341

This is page 341 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 342

This is page 342 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 343

This is page 343 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 344

This is page 344 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 345

This is page 345 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 346

This is page 346 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 347

This is page 347 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 348

This is page 348 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 349

This is page 349 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred forty-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 350

This is page 350 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 351

This is page 351 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 352

This is page 352 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 353

This is page 353 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 354

This is page 354 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 355

This is page 355 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 356

This is page 356 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 357

This is page 357 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 358

This is page 358 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 359

This is page 359 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred fifty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 360

This is page 360 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 361

This is page 361 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 362

This is page 362 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 363

This is page 363 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 364

This is page 364 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 365

This is page 365 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 366

This is page 366 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 367

This is page 367 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 368

This is page 368 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 369

This is page 369 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred sixty-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 370

This is page 370 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 371

This is page 371 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-one. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 372

This is page 372 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-two. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 373

This is page 373 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-three. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 374

This is page 374 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-four. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 375

This is page 375 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-five. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 376

This is page 376 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-six. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 377

This is page 377 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-seven. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 378

This is page 378 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-eight. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 379

This is page 379 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred seventy-nine. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 380

This is page 380 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 381

This is page 381 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-one. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 382

This is page 382 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-two. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 383

This is page 383 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-three. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 384

This is page 384 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-four. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 385

This is page 385 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-five. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 386

This is page 386 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-six. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 387

This is page 387 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-seven. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 388

This is page 388 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-eight. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 389

This is page 389 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred eighty-nine. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 390

This is page 390 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 391

This is page 391 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-one. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 392

This is page 392 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-two. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 393

This is page 393 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-three. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 394

This is page 394 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-four. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 395

This is page 395 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-five. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 396

This is page 396 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-six. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 397

This is page 397 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-seven. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 398

This is page 398 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-eight. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 399

This is page 399 of 500. In words, this is page three hundred ninety-nine. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 400

This is page 400 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 401

This is page 401 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred one. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 402

This is page 402 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred two. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 403

This is page 403 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred three. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 404

This is page 404 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred four. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 405

This is page 405 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred five. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 406

This is page 406 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred six. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 407

This is page 407 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seven. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 408

This is page 408 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eight. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 409

This is page 409 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred nine. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 410

This is page 410 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ten. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 411

This is page 411 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eleven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 412

This is page 412 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twelve. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 413

This is page 413 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirteen. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 414

This is page 414 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fourteen. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 415

This is page 415 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifteen. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 416

This is page 416 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixteen. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 417

This is page 417 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventeen. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 418

This is page 418 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighteen. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 419

This is page 419 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred nineteen. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 420

This is page 420 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 421

This is page 421 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-one. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 422

This is page 422 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-two. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 423

This is page 423 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-three. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 424

This is page 424 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-four. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 425

This is page 425 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-five. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 426

This is page 426 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-six. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 427

This is page 427 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-seven. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 428

This is page 428 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-eight. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 429

This is page 429 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred twenty-nine. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 430

This is page 430 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 431

This is page 431 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-one. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 432

This is page 432 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-two. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 433

This is page 433 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-three. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 434

This is page 434 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-four. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 435

This is page 435 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-five. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 436

This is page 436 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-six. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 437

This is page 437 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-seven. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 438

This is page 438 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-eight. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 439

This is page 439 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred thirty-nine. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 440

This is page 440 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 441

This is page 441 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-one. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 442

This is page 442 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-two. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 443

This is page 443 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-three. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 444

This is page 444 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-four. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 445

This is page 445 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-five. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 446

This is page 446 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-six. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 447

This is page 447 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-seven. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 448

This is page 448 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-eight. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 449

This is page 449 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred forty-nine. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 450

This is page 450 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 451

This is page 451 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-one. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 452

This is page 452 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-two. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 453

This is page 453 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-three. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 454

This is page 454 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-four. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 455

This is page 455 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-five. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 456

This is page 456 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-six. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 457

This is page 457 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-seven. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 458

This is page 458 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-eight. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 459

This is page 459 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred fifty-nine. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 460

This is page 460 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 461

This is page 461 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-one. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 462

This is page 462 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-two. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 463

This is page 463 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-three. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 464

This is page 464 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-four. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 465

This is page 465 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-five. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 466

This is page 466 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-six. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 467

This is page 467 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-seven. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 468

This is page 468 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-eight. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 469

This is page 469 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred sixty-nine. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 470

This is page 470 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 471

This is page 471 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-one. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 472

This is page 472 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-two. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 473

This is page 473 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-three. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 474

This is page 474 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-four. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.

Page 475

This is page 475 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-five. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters.

Page 476

This is page 476 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-six. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive.

Page 477

This is page 477 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-seven. The schoolteacher wrote the date on the board in careful round letters. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors.

Page 478

This is page 478 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-eight. Pigeons gathered on the roof of the granary to watch the carts arrive. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting.

Page 479

This is page 479 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred seventy-nine. A violin could be heard most evenings from the house with green doors. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow.

Page 480

This is page 480 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty. The ferry crossed the lake six times a day, weather permitting. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed.

Page 481

This is page 481 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-one. Its captain wore the same grey coat in summer and in snow. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin.

Page 482

This is page 482 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-two. Travellers often asked for directions to a bridge that no longer existed. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey.

Page 483

This is page 483 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-three. The innkeeper answered patiently and drew them a new route on a napkin. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival.

Page 484

This is page 484 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-four. In autumn the hills turned the colour of rust and honey. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel.

Page 485

This is page 485 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-five. Lanterns were hung along the harbour wall for the evening festival. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod.

Page 486

This is page 486 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-six. A small brass band rehearsed in the barn behind the chapel. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring.

Page 487

This is page 487 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-seven. The librarian stamped each returned book with a satisfied nod. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak.

Page 488

This is page 488 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-eight. Snow arrived late that year and stayed until the middle of spring. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule.

Page 489

This is page 489 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred eighty-nine. The miller repaired his wheel with timber from a broken oak. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name.

Page 490

This is page 490 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety. Most letters to the town arrived on Tuesdays, carried by a tired mule. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening.

Page 491

This is page 491 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-one. Someone painted a blue door at the end of the lane and left no name. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear.

Page 492

This is page 492 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-two. Fishermen mended their nets in the long light of the evening. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town.

Page 493

This is page 493 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-three. The bell tower leaned slightly to the north, like a listening ear. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs.

Page 494

This is page 494 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-four. The river bent twice before it reached the quiet market town. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun.

Page 495

This is page 495 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-five. Every window on the narrow street held a small clay pot of herbs. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain.

Page 496

This is page 496 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-six. A baker named Ilse opened her shutters an hour before the sun. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter.

Page 497

This is page 497 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-seven. Children chased paper boats along the gutter after the rain. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars.

Page 498

This is page 498 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-eight. The clock above the post office ran four minutes slow all winter. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool.

Page 499

This is page 499 of 500. In words, this is page four hundred ninety-nine. Nobody could remember who had planted the row of tall poplars. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube.

Page 500

This is page 500 of 500. In words, this is page five hundred. On market days the square smelled of apples, rope and wet wool. An old cartographer kept his maps rolled in a copper tube. He claimed that every road eventually returned to its own beginning.